

17 Aug 2012

Work & Force!

According to physics, work is a product of force and displacement. Which means that; for the work to happen, necessary amount of force is required. This fact becomes very evident in the professional life, where we constantly need some or the other kind of force to go on. Work and force, play in very interesting manners as per the situation and circumstances in the professional life. There are often times when the balance between work efficiency and the necessary force gets skewed. This is when the job-life undergoes major turbulent phases and the force which should ideally be motivational in nature; often becomes torturous.

Typically, the professional life goes through three main kinds of phases juggling the work and force; as per the requirement.

The Need to Work

Very rarely does life spare anyone from the stressful struggles of the financial crisis. For the same reason, most of the professional careers begin, not by choice of working; but by the necessity of earning. During this phase, the preferences and ultimate goals in life hardly matter. The need of the green, easily dominates the futuristic vision of one's life. This is the time when the efficiency and enthusiasm are generated not by interest, but by the fear of losing the job. Also, in this very phase; most of the people are susceptible to making wrong choices in career, whose effect might last much beyond that very job. Most of the times, the first job in the career path becomes a life-long journey in that particular field. However; those who successfully manage to pass this phase enter into a better state of working, where the money becomes secondary.

The Will to Work

This is a relatively relaxed phase of one's career as the basic financial battle is pretty much resolved by this time. The career now assumes a new level of enthusiasm and confidence in the corresponding field. The love and passion for the work meets the experiential expertise to generate a completely self-motivated state of working. The vision of the professional scenario and the related industry becomes clear-enough for an employee to start taking decisions and responsibilities in their life. The organisations that survive on the needs of its employees mostly fail in retrieving the 'will-abled' people. For the same reason; many people choose to start their own business during this phase. The ones that make it through this level attain the most advanced level of professional life.

The Freedom to Work

This is the best possible phase in the professional life. It is now that one can actually choose, whether he wishes to work or not. The financial struggles and other related tensions are left far behind. The experience is at its peak and the person even has the liberty to not work, as well. During this phase, people start contributing their talent and potentials towards the betterment of their fields and the world. Very dedicated employees choose to voluntarily serve their organisations and the entrepreneurs start enabling their businesses to function autonomously. The innovation and research oriented investments occur heavily during this phase. This is the phase when the work indeed becomes free from force!

Pratik Kalawala | Content Strategy Lead, ALPHADEZINE